

The Ember

Your Future Maker type

WHO YOU ARE

She's not loud about it, never has been. Real heat's banked down underneath, waiting for the moment she decides to move. People who don't know her well assume there's not much going on. They're wrong.

YOUR PAIN POINTS

- Gets mistaken for uninterested or passive, when really she's holding real intensity back on purpose.
- Keeps waiting for the “right moment” to let the heat out, and the right moment keeps not arriving.
- Worried that if she actually showed what's underneath, it would be too much for the room.
- Quietly resents being underestimated, but rarely says so out loud.

TIPS AND TRICKS FOR YOU

- Let a small amount of heat out on purpose, every week. One direct sentence. One decisive email. You don't need the whole bonfire yet.
- Tell one person, plainly: “there's more in me than you think.” Just see how it feels to say it.
- Set an actual date for the thing you're banking down for. “Someday” doesn't hold heat, a deadline does.
- Notice the exact moment you bank it back down, and name it out loud when it happens.

growingwomeninbusiness.com
@growingwomeninbusiness