

The Firestarter

Your Future Maker type

WHO YOU ARE

She gets everyone else moving, every single time, and she's always last on her own list. If there's a fire that needs lighting for somebody else, she's already there with the match.

YOUR PAIN POINTS

- Burns out quietly from constantly being the one who starts things for everyone but herself.
- Feels guilty the moment she tries to put her own priority first, like she's stealing time that belongs to someone else.
- The people around her can resist when she finally stops lighting fires for them, which makes stopping feel even harder.
- Nobody's ever really asked her what she'd start, if it were just for her.

TIPS AND TRICKS FOR YOU

- Put your own name on the list. Literally, in writing, this week. Not at the bottom. Somewhere near the top.
- Block one hour that's non-negotiable, and treat it exactly like you'd treat someone else's emergency.
- Notice the guilt spike the moment you say no to someone else's fire. Say no anyway, once, and see what actually happens.
- Find a fear buddy whose whole job is to start fires for you, for once.

growingwomeninbusiness.com

@growingwomeninbusiness