

The Late Bloomer

Your Future Maker type

WHO YOU ARE

She's not behind, she never was. She's built on her own timeline while everyone else made noise about theirs, and she's about to catch up fast, on terms that are actually hers.

YOUR PAIN POINTS

- Compares her timeline to peers who “made it” earlier, and quietly absorbs shame about the gap.
- Carries the 2am whisper: is it too late to start now?
- Assumes the years she spent building elsewhere don't count, because they don't look like a straight line on a CV.
- Worries that catching up means rushing, rather than just moving at her own real pace.

TIPS AND TRICKS FOR YOU

- Write an actual timeline of what you were doing in the years you think of as “behind.” It's rarely nothing.
- Ask someone further along how long it actually took them. It's almost always longer than it looked from the outside.
- Set 90-day sprints for yourself instead of comparing to someone else's decade.
- Remind yourself plainly: catching up fast is still a real speed. It's not a myth you're telling yourself.

growingwomeninbusiness.com

@growingwomeninbusiness