

Mademoiselle

Your Future Maker type

WHO YOU ARE

She's got standards, and she's not sorry for them. She's not waiting because she's scared, she's waiting for the right room, and she gets to decide when that room's ready. Nobody else gets a vote.

YOUR PAIN POINTS

- Gets labelled “too picky” or precious for having standards other people wouldn't bother holding.
- The wait can quietly tip into perfectionism, procrastination wearing a nicer outfit.
- Fears that no room will ever feel entirely “ready enough,” so she keeps waiting past the point it was actually time.
- Rarely tells anyone what “ready” would actually look like, so nobody can help her get there.

TIPS AND TRICKS FOR YOU

- Set a real deadline for “ready,” a date, not a feeling. Feelings can wait forever, dates can't.
- Separate “I have high standards” from “I'm avoiding the risk of being seen actually trying.” They're not the same thing.
- Pick the smallest room available to you right now, and treat it as practice, not the final stage.
- Write down exactly what “ready” looks like in specifics. Not a vibe. An actual list.

growingwomeninbusiness.com
@growingwomeninbusiness