

The Pearl

Your Future Maker type

WHO YOU ARE

Whatever she's been carrying has been under pressure a long time, and it's turned into something worth showing. She's just been keeping it inside the shell, because that's where it's always felt safest.

YOUR PAIN POINTS

- Carries something real, grief, responsibility, a hard past, and rarely gets credit for what it took to hold it.
- Worries that showing it will look like complaining, or oversharing, so she keeps it shut.
- The shell has quietly become an identity of its own, safer than being open, even when it's not needed anymore.
- Assumes nobody wants to hear it, so she never finds out that they do.

TIPS AND TRICKS FOR YOU

- Write the pressure story down once, just for you, before you ever think about sharing it with anyone else.
- Pick one person you trust completely, and open the shell for them first. Not the whole room. One person.
- Reframe it: it's not "what I survived," it's "what I now actually know how to do."
- The shell can stay. You get to crack it open on your own terms, in your own time, not all at once.